

SF 3-Day Forecast

	M	T	W
	56	54	54
	41	42	35

Search for

EAT + DRINK | ARTS + ENTERTAINMENT | SHOPPING | FASHION + BEAUTY
FIND A STORE | KEY BUY

Key Buys

Macworld 2008 Blog

7x7 gives you an all-access pass to the activities—from Steve Jobs' keynote to the coolest product parties—at this year's Macworld.

posted on January 14, 2008

✉ email

Chelsea Holden Baker has judged chili, sold knives and worked in the Dominican Republic, but she's had the most fun as an editor for dwell, and a freelance girl-about-town.

Jason Jurgens drinks too many mochas, pays for a gym he doesn't use and publishes theowlmag.com, an online music magazine. He contributes to Remix, E! Online, Diablo and DRUM, and has produced online video content for 7x7, Lexus and Mix.

Pia Chatterjee is an SF-based writer and journalist. In her writing, she explores the human side of business and technology, immigrant issues, and the quirks and complexities of long-term relationships.

7x7 photo editor Stefanie Michejda obsesses about technology; she's currently debating between the Canon 1 Mark 3 vs. the Nikon D3 and wondering if the new iPhone will have 3G and a sufficient memory boost.

Friday, January 18, 2008

Is Your iPod Fully Loaded?

Among the many Macworld perks for (pricey) badge holders are classes taught by Mac luminaries:

iPod session was led by Andy Ihnatko, who--to a certain kind of person--is a star. A columnist for Times, Macworld contributing editor and author of iPod Fully Loaded, Andy gave us the Cliff Note about optimizing the iPod experience.

Nike/iPod sport kits aside, we all have the creeping guilt about technology making us lazy-- but you know it in a way you don't realize. Andy says, "If you have more than half a megabyte of unused space"-- well, not on a Nano or a Classic--"You just aren't trying hard enough."

The following are some useful links to load you up on everything from your favorite TV shows (remember cable!), to podcasts and Word docs. While much of this material potentially tramples upon copyright opinion, "People don't care so much about sticking it to the man, they just want to view more on their devices." So if you've got good intentions, here you go:

Keepvid.com: Like many of Andy's favorites, this site is free. Download films from Google, YouTube, etc. for your iPod, through an extremely simple series of clicks.

ElGato eyeTV tuners: We get closer to a Jetson's style future every day. These USB sticks rip you out from cable for viewing on iTV, iPod and iPhone. Buy it today for the $50 Macworld discount.

Radioshift: Bored with radio? Why not browse what's happening in the rest of the world with an internet radio? Record any show you want to listen to in a time zone comfortable for you.

And finally, did you know you already own a book viewer? When syncing your iPod, take a look at the Book Viewer page (and yes, this is one thing that iPod owners can load over iPhone snobs--the iPhone does not have this capability). Turn any email or document into a plain text file for easy upload. Provided you won't delete it from your iPod, this is a good place to stash things like travel itineraries while on the go. After all, Andy Bowie on the bigscreen thanks to Keepvid.com.

Radioshift's world map of broadcasts.

Posted by Chelsea Holden Baker, on January 18, 2008 at 1:43 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS POST

Friday, January 18, 2008

Mac Mingling with Their Own

If they'd been wearing red instead of black, you might have thought it was a Santa convention (the preferred food was nachos, not cookies). Despite the drab attire, the Rubenesque (but male) crowd at the Mac Mingle on Thursday night was too jolly to be mistaken for a funeral. The Mac Mingle was hosted by Mac Efron and Mac Efron Shadovitz and the Maccast's Adam Christianson for Macworld badge attendees only. For many, it beginning of recess. By Friday, the last day of Macworld, the oglers have dissipated, and it's just t people taking time off from manning their booths who are milling about Moscone.

This was the kind of crowd that had seen each other a week before at the Consumer Electronics S and still couldn't get enough Bill Gates bashing. Gates gave the keynote speech at CES, which fea minute video spoof of his last day of work. If you're a fan of Mathew McConaughy, George Cloor Spielberg, John Stewart, Bono, Hilary or Obama, it's worth watching. Apparently the Mac crowd t to kumbayah songs about Steve Jobs' keynotes-- "Killin' me softly with his slides," oh yeah. But s was hosted by a podcaster, it was necessary to roll the Ask A Ninja episode on podcasting for the if you're over the age of 12 and have wondered what podcasting is, this probably won't explain an you might find it funny.

Jillian's

15-year-old Matthew Zambole and his home-made Sponge Bob Squarepants with an iPod.

Allison Lowenstein from New York, and boyfriend Tom Loverro of Drobo, one of the sponsors.

The big screen displays software by a sponsor. Billiards in the back.

The disco ball did not inspire dancing.

Posted by Chelsea Holden Baker, on January 18, 2008 at 12:23 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK T

Thursday, January 17, 2008

Ladybug Takes Flight

To celebrate the launch of the cutest little iPod speaker system, the Ladybug, VestaLife kicked it c most notoriously dangerous SF hoods. Walking down Sixth Street after a night of drinking require cajones. But I braved the potential beat down to better understand the bold move. One step throug Club 6 and it became obvious: Element Skateboards. VestaLife and Element formed a unique mar youth culture, design and creativity. Part art loft, part music venue, Club 6 provided the ideal laun

PR executive Leland Drummond and Lisa Wachtell, CMO of VestaLife, revel in the night's success.

Medical researcher Lowry Champion and real estate agent Ciara Piron scope the view from the bar.

Musicians Derrik Boyd and Lance Desardi vie for a position close to the stage.

Brian Aubert, lead singer of the Silver Pickups, checks out the art.

Elemental Awareness director Todd Larson and software rep Neal George of Montclair in the sushi lounge.

Elise-Marie and DJ Richie Panic strike a pose.

Element founder Johnny Schillereff.

Artist Ryan Shaff from the Western Edition paints a d

As Element founder Johnny Schillereff said, just before he showcased his human beat box skillz, ‘about change.’ So true Johnny, particularly in this case. There aren’t many times when you can see skateboarder rubbing elbows with a software salesman. But the Ladybug has the mojo to bring the together.

Blank skateboards hung on the walls like canvases as local artists gave them color. Artistically designed were displayed in glass cases like museum artifacts. DJs took us back to the days of gansta rap with and Dr. Dre, as minglers gathered around the free sushi buffet. But the true highlight, and perhaps of us showed up (sorry VestaLife), was an intimate set with the Siversun Pickups. There won't be opportunities like this to see the Pickups in such a small venue.

Aaron Axelsen of Live 105, Angel Cruz, owner of Club 6, and Lindsey Byrnes (photo by Jason Jurgens)

photography by Stefanie Michejda

Posted by Jason Jurgens, on January 17, 2008 at 4:55 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Thursday, January 17, 2008

David Pogue Does It His Way

After my night at Swig, I regretted signing up for an early morning session (9 a.m.) comprising David Pogue's show. Then the screens lit up with a video of David—who is the New York Times technology columnist—introducing the iPhone to the tune of Sinatra's "I Did it My Way":

“God, this thing is sweet,
A multi-touch,
iPod Wi-Fi Phone,
You had me from hello,
I want an iPhone ...

... It's all the things a phone should be ...
I took a stand,
Paid half a grand,
And got an iPhone ...

Suddenly, dragging myself out of bed to go to Moscone and wait in line after a late night out was Lines outside David Pogue's talk show.

Inside the talk show.

An announcement was made introducing Office 2008 for Macs that's supposed to be better than iWork. Then another announcement came out for MacSpeech Dictate, which is a brand-new speech recognition software that works with 99 percent accuracy on all Mac apps. The latter actually piqued my interest. Suffering from tendonitis, like I do, this appears to be a great and painless way to "write."

But really, the best part of the talk show was when David had some Apple fanatics come up on stage to share their tales of Applemania:

For example, there was Bob, who once built a modified car-seat (like for a baby) for his Apple laptop. He got in line at 7:45 the night before for Steve's keynote speech. James came up and talked about his 150 Macs, which he keeps in a room he's dubbed the Mac-a. My favorite story came from April, who got married to her husband at a Macworld conference, and at the wedding exchanged iPod Shuffles instead of rings.

Sigh. It's a Mac, Mac world.

Michael Supernaw and Sarah Rigney add a dash of style to Macworld.

Posted by Pia Chatterjee, on January 17, 2008 at 4:00 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS 17, 2008

Thursday, January 17, 2008

Look of the Day

Interaction designer Guillermo Torres picked up his scarf in Amsterdam and the jacket was a gift from his wife and sister. Shoes and jeans are from the Gap.

Posted by Chelsea Holden Baker, on January 17, 2008 at 3:05 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO ORIGINAL

Thursday, January 17, 2008

Our Personal Faves

Since Macworld left us with a lot more to be desired, we took it upon ourselves to find the hippest items on the expo floor. And here are our faves:

VestaLife's Ladybug: This iPod speaker docking system's innovative design, hip graphics and portability give you ample reason to take the party anywhere.

Gilty Couture: An iPhone is cool and all, but it really doesn't make a statement until you bling it out with one of Gilty Couture's fashionable cases.

Mimobots by Domo: Traditional memory sticks are so yesterday. The designs of these little flash drives, particularly the Star Wars edition, put the fun in functional.

Macbook Air: Of course it made our list, it's the reason we're here. The thinness is impressive, but the spacious multi-touch trackpad that allows you to do functions similar to the iPhone (pinch and swipe) make it a must have travel item.

Belkin's demo booth: After a long day of walking the expo floor, Belkin's chic lounge was the perfect place to rest the dogs. Live music, leather couches, even a bed. How much to rent the place?

Skullcandy's Double Agent Headphones: Simply load your favorite tunes on an SD card, place in the slot and go. These headphones have a built in media player. No wires. No extra device. Perfect for any outdoor adventure.

Guitar Hero 3: On Macworld, you we onto something. The game turns kids, and certain adults, into addicts quicker than Amsterdam.

photography by Stefanie Michejda

Posted by Jason Jurgens, on January 17, 2008 at 2:46 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Thursday, January 17, 2008

Best of Show

The line for Macworld's Best of Show coiled around the third floor mezzanine and nearly spilled by the escalator. No writers' strike was going to put this award ceremony on hold. Gary Numan's Cars w monitors as I took my seat, and blue and red lights illuminated the auditorium to complete the '80 dance effect. Macworld editor Jason Snell and writer Jim Dalrymple (who looks like Rick Rubin) ran off a list of their best ofs, which left me scratching my head. Sorry Macworld, but I couldn't c virtual servers and vector applications. Save for the new Macbook Air and Guitar Hero 3, there's 1 awarded to email home about. Where are all the shiny accessories? I don't want to be organized. I something that I don't need but makes me look and feel cool.

Here are Macworld's picks for Best of Show:

Adobe Photoshop Elements: cheap, consumer-friendly photo editing software.

Vector Designer (Tweakertools): an intuitive vector drawing application that allows you to create Parallels Server (Swsoft): allows users to run Windows and Linux in virtual servers at the same t Server.

NEC Multi-sync LCD3090WQXi): a 30-inch display that swivels.

Macbook Air: a thinner, lighter Macbook that is easy on the back.

Eye-Fi card: a WIFI SD card.

Guitar Hero 3 (Aspire): one of the hottest games on the market meets Apple.

Dictate (MacSpeech): put the pen down and let the thoughts flow.

Flow (Gridiron Software): digital content management software for creative professionals.

Busy Sync 2.0 (BusyMac): allows you to view and edit your calendars online, and syncs your iC calendars so people can see what you're doing.

OmniFocus (The Omni Group): an application that helps mutli-taskers better manage their time

Posted by Jason Jurgens, on January 17, 2008 at 12:30 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Wednesday, January 16, 2008

A Match Made by Mac: The Meet Scene at Swig

When I walked into Swig, I found myself surrounded by techie lads and ladies, who were sipping and Scotch on the rocks while chatting each other up at the DailyTechTalk party. Which was great methods ... well, their methods left much to be desired. I watched as an older (much older) woman young Oakland-ite; she sidled up to her, smiled and asked, "Are you an Apple fan?"

I hid my smile behind my drink, but too soon it was my turn. A voice behind me commanded, "Take it off." "Excuse me?" I asked. "It's sexier without the badge," I was told. The badge in question was which I'd left on after leaving the Macworld conference. Turned out my suitor was a photographer from San Francisco. "I think it's cool how Steve Jobs rhymes with See God," he told me earnestly. I, equally, hid my smile behind my drink. Thankfully he left.

On the couch next to me, a couple giggled as they snapped photos of each other with identical iPhones. They have been cute, but they were wearing matching outfits too. In the far corner, a tall attractive Apple fan was talking to a shy Asian girl. "Are you enjoying Macworld?" he asked her. "I love it," she responded. He smiled on his heart and pretended to swoon. It was a match made by Mac.

Lewis O'Neil, Sharon
Russel

Ward Carroll, Danni
Verrall

The scene at Swig

Posted by Pia Chatterjee, on January 16, 2008 at 11:11 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Wednesday, January 16, 2008

Hitting the Expo Floor

It's not every day that you get to fondle a supermodel, and at Macworld 2008, everyone wanted to anorexic MacBook Air. There was no doubt that Mac products were the apple of everyone's eye. Apple made up for it with elaborate displays designed to catch and keep eyes on accessories like iPod and (here's looking at you Moshi and Crumpler). Of course, many people were anxious just to rest their heads on MetroNaps' Energy Pods one of the most popular destinations.

MetroNaps

Moshi

Axiotron Modbook

Crumpler

Neal H. Pogue

Mac crowd

Pseudo-celebs provided interesting eddies for people who wanted to get away from the traffic flow. Grammy-winning producer Neal H. Pogue toyed with a new track from Outkast's Andre 3000, she of iLife's Garage Band in the BestBuy booth. Live demos were also popular, especially when the s live models, as at the Axiotron station. Axiotron pimped a Mac for designers, creating a tablet dut gets everyone from long-haul truckers to script-writers excited. With a sensitive stylus of 512 pres (compared to an average 250 or so on other models), there were lots of oohs and ahhs over the pos of the pencil. The sketches look like graphite, and the handwriting recognition is nearly flawless, c chicken-scratch generation raised on keyboards.

All in all, everyone seemed a bit wistful for the level of elation over the iPhone of yesteryear, but crowds from packing it in and speculating about who would take "Best in Show."

Macbook Air

Apples everywhere

iPod listening station

Posted by Chelsea Holden Baker, on January 16, 2008 at 6:11 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO

Wednesday, January 16, 2008

Look of the Day

Baiyina Hughley is a San Francisco freelance interior designer. She splurges on shoes like these Finn in Hayes Valley, and pairs them with a less-pricey shirt from Sarah Jessica Parker's Bitten line and her own earrings.

Posted by Chelsea Holden Baker, on January 16, 2008 at 5:01 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS POST

Wednesday, January 16, 2008

EFF's Party at 111 Minna Merges Tech, Food and Nude Girls

EFF, The Electronic Frontier Foundation (your friendly neighborhood civil rights fighters) celebrated their birthday with long-time supporters and new-found friends from Macworld at 111 Minna on Tuesday. It was a good birthday party should have, there were beats, drinks, sweets and ... nudie pics?

TCHO co-founders Timothy Childs and Louis Rossetto with Burning Man board member, Michael Michael, AKA "Danger Ranger"

Designer for FLOCK, Lauren Rassel, the photographer Merkley???, and 111 Minna assistant curator David Leyra

Just a few days prior on the 11th, 111 Minna opened photographer Merkley???'s show of 111 near (they are wearing their favorite shoes), III, to a line two blocks long and six people deep—the kind of thing San Francisco hadn't seen since the iPhone was released last year. Oh yes, and for Steve's Keynote this Tuesday was a considerably better night to get up close and personal with the art as there were more than exclamations of "Hey, that's my hairstylist!" Just when we thought the techies were ready for ...

Eric McDougal of TCHO Jazz Great Herbie Hancock (and TCHO's first customer)

At least everyone can enjoy chocolate without blushing. Following in tech fashion, the new San F chocolate company, TCHO, sampled two "beta versions" of their confections for feedback. TCHO between Timothy Childs, a former Space Shuttle technologist-cum-chocolatier, and Louis Rossetti Wired. While the Fancy Food Show went on in San Diego, the TCHO team stayed put for the Mac "This is Silicon Valley start-up meets SF food culture, and these are our people," said Childs.

DJ Kid Kameleon

Freelancer Hilary Witt-Rock and EFF webmaster Chris

Designers May Woo and Arena Reed

DJ Ripley and EFF investor/Wired co-founder

Jane Metcalfe

Photographer/Yahoo! employee/model
Nathalie Villalobos; ViddYou's co-founders Aaron J. Wadler and Ryan Bailey, all of the Hat Factory.

Mara Brazer, Emi Takahara

Betterpropaganda.com's computer scientist
Phillip McCallister and publisher Ken
Manning with artist Heather Sparks

Ronin Publishing's Beverly Potter and Stanford researcher Peter Jacobson

But why chocolate, and not the next elderflower spirit, or a winery in Napa? According to Rossett the last good drug." But as for his preference between A and B: "Just as I said in the magazine day asked which issue was my favorite, I have to say, "The next one."

Posted by Chelsea Holden Baker, on January 16, 2008 at 11:32 AM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK T

Wednesday, January 16, 2008

Look of the Day

Kiwi Irwin, a 24-year old consultant from Palm Springs, is rockin' the fur hoodie and iPhone.

Posted by Stefanie Michejda, on January 16, 2008 at 11:24 AM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO T

Wednesday, January 16, 2008

Star Search

When you're celebrity sleuthing at an expo that has anything to do with technology, you can rest assured that a pasty-skinned, WOW-playing demo will come out in droves. Which makes stalking at Macworld a little harder. It's easy to identify the Hollywood types, but everyone else looks like Bill Gates and Steve Jobs. Those are the real stars of the week.

The real star: Steve Jobs

That said, I wasn't sure if it was a good sign or bad omen when I ran into Sinbad at the beginning of the star search. It turned out to be a bit more of the latter than the former. Everywhere I went, Sinbad was there first. Yes, he's a celebrity, but it's been awhile since he's done, well, anything. Though he did the Way and First Kid. (You'll have to go to IMDB for proof.) Was this what I was to expect?

Nonetheless, Sinbad's jovial demeanor was worth exploring. Was he clued in to any Apple news? bring him some inside scoop? Turns out, Sinbad had the same question as you and me: Is there a r

"You never know what to expect," said Sinbad, a leopard print towel hanging on his shoulder. "A partner with people [AT&T] that couldn't keep up. I expect to see a 3G iPhone."

Much to my chagrin, and Sinbad's I'm sure, Mr. Jobs didn't unleash a new iPhone. That wasn't the "Something's in the Air" banners plastered all over the place. Instead, Apple unveiled the MacBook thin computer meant for people on the go. Which was pretty cool and satisfied my geek appetite.

My walk over to Moscone West was interrupted by another sighting—of Boston Red Sox pitcher (first I thought, Schilling in SOMA? Hmmm. Maybe a signing by the Giants? But I quickly realize sign winners. (That's neither here nor there.) Schilling admitted that the keynote was "impressive" customer experience." Sounds like Schills is using an Apple when he writes those controversial bl steroid scandal.

After striking out on the West side (sorry for the pun), I headed over to the South side of the track: man himself: Steve Jobs. Of course, I didn't really run into him. I would have, but several smiling escorted me away. Which is fine, I can't imagine how many people want to speak with him. So m: How does it feel to know you're responsible for this? When are we going to see a new iPhone? Do anything other than a black turtleneck?

Leaving Jobs with little to show for the encounter, I ran into Herbie Hancock as I waited in line for Apparently, the legendary jazz pianist's prowess extends beyond the ivory keys and into Macworld a nerdgasm, Hancock dropped knowledge on me that left me befuddled like a lame PC user.

"I always come to Macworld if I can. If I'm not in Rangoon, Tokyo or Shanghai," joked Hancock "All the new stuff is cool. I have two of the things, an iPhone and Apple TV, but the new software them so much more functional."

Sorry Herbie. Even with the upgrades, I'm still holding out for iPhone 2.0.

Herbie Hancock: "I always come to Macworld if I can. If I'm not in Rangoon, Tokyo or Shanghai."

Sinbad: "You never know what to expect."

Johnny Schillereff (founder Element Skateboards): "When I was first approached about going into the digital world, was turned off. I didn't want Element to get into that. Then I saw what VestaLife was doing, and I was hooked. And that was before I even knew held an iPod."

Posted by Jason Jurgens, on January 16, 2008 at 11:01 AM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Tuesday, January 15, 2008

Look of the Day

Naoko Lewis of Chicago does geek chic in a Benetton dress and Cole Haan boots.

Posted by Pia Chatterjee, on January 15, 2008 at 4:49 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Tuesday, January 15, 2008

Steve Jobs and the iWin Button

Audience emerging from Steve Jobs' Keynote.

I guess I have to stop being so surprised when I see crowds at Macworld. The keynote room was full in the morning and the vibe was that of a concert, with folks snapping pics and chatting on cell phones to see how great it was to be here.

Right after the keynote, the crowds burst out of the conference rooms, and here's what they had to

Kathleen, Matthew and Chris; Andreas and Verena at MacWorld, visiting from Germany; Allana's photographer at Macworld

For Cory Ranscham, who works for Room & Board and lives in Minneapolis, his first Macworld conference was definitely an experience. He was surprised at how accurate the rumor mill had been—“they predicted everything,” he said happily. About the new introductions, he was most impressed with the MacBook Air. “That's typical Apple innovation,” he said. “That touchpad is amazing in all that you can do with it.” He's willing to pay up to $1,800 for it though, as his present laptop—also a Mac—works just fine.

Alana Taranto, 29 and living in San Francisco, was similarly impressed with the MacBook Air. But she was also excited about the new movie rental capabilities. “I think we've just seen the future of home entertainment,” she said. She's eager to try it out.

Jamie, visiting from Los Angeles, believes that Steve Jobs has an iWin button. She's delighted with the new movie rentals, but wasn't terribly impressed with the notebook. Visiting from Germany, Andreas and Verena think the MacBook Air is great, though they admit they're undecided as to whether they'll a “Let’s see,” Andreas said.

All in all, “it feels like Apple is finally listening to what the consumer wants,” said Matthew Bentl IT support in Massachusetts. “So far, we’ve just had to accept whatever they introduce. But this ti like they heard what the users had to say, and gave us what we really need.”

Amen to that.

Posted by Pia Chatterjee, on January 15, 2008 at 4:16 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Tuesday, January 15, 2008

Steve Jobs’ Big Reveal

We (meaning our design director Ben Hardiman and I) arrived at Moscone at 6 a.m. to get into Ma speech, and there was already a line wrapping all the way around the center and down Minna Stre when they finally let us in, it seemed like there were thousands waiting behind and in front of us. 5 drawing a crowd.

This picture doesn't do the massive crowd justice ... trust me, there were thousands.

Here follows the big reveal at the Keynote with Steve.

New iPhone features: Apple has upgraded the mapping application by adding “faux-GPS” capab hybrid map view. Teaming Google’s cell tower and Skyhook Wireless’s wifi base station database now triangulate where you are and tie it into the Map application, providing a much improved use Apple’s also added the ability to create up to nine custom home screens, Webclips (which can be s access on one of the custom home screens), multi-person SMS messaging and improved video pla subtitles and language support). This is a free update for all iPhone users. Of note: The iPhone sm share is now as much as Palm, Motorola and Nokia combined (4 million sold in 200 days).

iTunes Music Rentals: The ability to download movies from all of the major movie studios on a 1 for new releases, $2.99 for “library” movies. You get to keep the download up to 30 days, and onc viewing it, you have 24 hours to watch it as many times as you want. They can be watched on a M any currently shipping iPod, the new AppleTV (below), as well as moved between these devices. available for $1 more.

AppleTV updates: A free software upgrade to the AppleTV launched last year that completely u AppleTV from your computer. While you can still stream music, pictures and video from your co now do this all directly on the AppleTV as well, including previewing, renting and purchasing dir iTunes store. A completely redesigned interface also features YouTube, Podcasts, Flickr and .Mac and adds full HD Dolby 5.1 surround sound. The price for a new AppleTV dropped to $229.

Time Capsule for Time Machine: A pretty nifty device, designed to take advantage of Leopards software, Time Machine. Acting as both an “N” class wireless router and print server, it also hous or 1TB “server grade” hard drive. Now, instead of needing to plug external hard drives into your / backup (and remembering to do so), you just go about your day as you usually would, with Time automatically backing up your data, seamlessly with no intervention required by the user. This is t perfect “parent’s backup solution”—I know my mom will be getting one. 500GB = $299, 1TB = $

Now the biggie: MacBook Air

Worlds thinnest laptop. All aluminum shell, 3lbs total weight, five-hour battery life. Full size, bac 13.3 inch LED backlit widescreen. DVI video output, no optical drive and 2GB of RAM standard optional solid-state drives available. Brand new, oversized “multi-touch” trackpad that offers man navigation features, but on a computer. Very, very rad. There is an external optical disc drive opti new piece of software that allows you to share another Mac or PCs optical drive as if it was conne MacBook Air. His Steveness also commented that the computer is very green: bromide and PVR 1 arsenic-free glass and the new packaging is 56% smaller. All for $1,799. They’re gunna sell a ton

Guest blogger and 7x7’s IT/production director
Tim Wudarski says he’s All Nerd, All the Time™

Posted by Tim Wudarski, on January 15, 2008 at 12:17 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

Monday, January 14, 2008

And So it Begins...

As I walked into the Ars Technica and Gizmodo Macworld party at Harlot, the first thing I noticec crowded it was. It was only a couple of minutes past 8 p.m., the official start time for the party, an space felt full. The club was dimly lit, and the tall walls sprouted pictures of barely dressed wome was looking—instead everyone was busy trying to predict what Steve Jobs was going to be unveil Laura Hunt's cool hairstyle was a hit.

The Ars Technica and Gizmodo Party at Harlot.

Here are a few expert guesses of what Tuesday's Keynote will bring:

- A tablet version of the MacBook Pro—a super portable, ultra sleek item that will finally make computer mainstream;
- The second generation Apple iPhone with GPS capacity—pretty much everyone thinks this on
- Movie rentals on iTunes—NetFlix is getting way too cool for school.

If the party was any indication, Macworld is bound to be quite the show. Roughly 50,000 people attend tomorrow, and this was borne out by the massive turnout at Harlot. The bar was at capacity the gates opened.

Looks like MacMania is here to stay.

Maya Baratz (Flickr) and Megan McCarthy (Wired)

Melissa, Ronnie, David and

*Sue Ping Shyy, Tamikeo and Winnie Wong
Veronica*

KC! and Veronica

Posted by Pia Chatterjee, on January 14, 2008 at 11:17 PM, PDT EMAIL THIS | LINK TO THIS

✉ email

FEATURED COMMENTS	SEE ALL COMMENTS	ADD COMMENT

ABOUT US | ADVERTISE | SUBSCRIBE | SITEMAP | SECURITY